Liaoning University International Conference 2024

China Development and the Global Economy

June 8, 2024

Over the past four and a half decades, China's growth has been the envy of the world, and has contributed significantly to the global economic growth. However, the past ten years has proven to be challenging. The New Normal, population aging, trade friction, geopolitical tension, and COVID have all weighed heavy on China's rate of growth. Though China's commitment to the battle against global warming, the BRI, and the success in AI development are all hopes for the future, both domestically and globally.

In this challenging environment, China's development needs to combine institutional reforms and industrial upgrade, stem the tide of de-globalization, and lower the tension geopolitically. This conference is aimed at bringing together leading scholars in the area to share and exchange ideas that would benefit both China and the world. We welcome submissions on, but not limited to, the following topics:

- High-quality economic development of China
- New Normality and Economic Stability
- BRI and its global effects
- Digital economy and digital trade
- Digital transformation and labour market consequences
- Population Aging and Fertility
- Environment and sustainability
- Change and upgrade of Chinese trade structure in the new era of de-globalization
- Trade fictions and sustainable global supply chains
- Openness of Northeast China and trade cooperation of Northeast Asia
- China's inward and outward foreign direct investment
- Innovation and business development
- Regional development and internal migration
- New-type urbanization, social insurance and health care
